

Student success is at the heart of Harper’s mission. Our early alert tool, Starfish, is used to facilitate communication among students, faculty and advisors regarding students’ academic achievements and areas for improvement. In addition to awarding Kudos to acknowledge excellent performance, Starfish is also used by faculty to raise concerns and to direct students to free resources such as the Academic Support Center and Hawks Care Resource Center.

- All credit students are in the Starfish system. This allows faculty to give a Kudo or raise a flag for any of their students at any time of the semester.
- In addition, many faculty members will receive requests during the semester to submit a ‘Progress Survey’ for a subset of their students.
 - Students who appear on surveys may include those affiliated with high-stake programs or those where data may indicate a lower likelihood of persistence.
 - No feedback? When filling out a Progress Survey, you do not have to select a flag or kudo for every student. If you leave all the check boxes blank for a student, no feedback is assumed, and no notifications will be sent. To indicate no feedback for an entire survey, simply open the progress survey and click the submit button.
 - The following table identifies the survey schedule by the associated Part of Term.
 - Progress Surveys are open for three weeks and close at 11:00 p.m. on the designated due date.
